Not illustrated. 1852 Excerpt: ...mines are very numerous, and pigs of lead, with the official stamps of the Roman miners, are by no means of uncommon occurrence. This stamp usually consisted of an inscription giving the name of the emperor under whose reign the lead had been produced from the furnace. The annexed cut represents one of these pigs of lead, found in Roman Pig of Lead, from Hampshire. 1783, on the verge of Broughton brook, near Stockbridge, in Hampshire. It will serve to give a general idea of the form and character of these articles, and it has a certain historical interest from the circumstance that it was made the year before the insurrection of Boadicea. The main inscription is, Neronis Avg. Ex Kianiiii cos Beit. On one side are the letters Hvl Pmcos; on the other, Ex Argent and Capascas, with the numeral xxx.f Other In Britannia summo terra corio adeo large, ut lex ultro dicatnr, ne plus certo modo fiat.--Plin. Hist. Nat., lib. xxxv., c. 17. + Mr. Roach Smith observes on this inscription.-- As Nero never assumed the title of Britannicus, and as the numerals precede the cos, I suspect the inscription should be read--(Plumbum or Metallum) Neronis Aug. cos. iiii., Ex. Kian. Brit. The P.M. Cos may belong to the above, and the rest be the name of some superintendent. examples found at different times have presented the following inscriptions:--1.
