Excerpt from Cotton Is King: Or the Culture of Cotton, and Its Relation to Agriculture, Manufacturers and Commerce; To the Free Colored People; And to Those Who Hold That Slavery Is in Itself Sinful. In the preparation of the following pages, the Author has aimed at clearness of statement, rather than elegance of diction. He sets up no claim to literary distinction; and, even if he did, every man of classical taste knows, that a work, abounding in facts and statistics, affords little opportunity for any display of literary ability. The greatest care has been taken, by the Author, to secure perfect accuracy in the statistical information supplied and in all the facts stated. The authorities consulted, are Brandes Dictionary of Science, Literature and Art; Porters Progress of the British Nation; McCulloughs Commercial Dictionary; Encyclop?dia Americana; London Economist; De Bows Review; Patent Office Reports; Congressional Reports on Commerce and Navigation; Abstract of the Census Reports, 1850; and Compendium of the Census Reports.
