

In Defence of America (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from In Defence of America
My Dear X, You ask me if I will write a series of articles on the United States, giving the American point of view in reply to a number of hard hits at poor Uncle Sam, which you kindly cite as instances of the criticisms popularly prevailing in England. My reply is an emphatic yes. I give it so much the more willingly, since, outside of the community of racial traits in body and mind clearly demonstrated in many man to man stage encounters in wild mining camps and cattle ranches, the political future may easily bring issues to the front which the two cousins must face together if the Anglo-Saxon race is to remain the Top-Dog.
