

Kalms Account of His Visit to England on His Way to America in 1748 (Classic Reprint)

Xli LIFE OF KALM. express my gratitude to the person who has communicated anything, and not to give out as my own that which belongs to another, partly that it may stand to my informants p. 14 own account, in case it be found to be little in accordance with the truth. In reference to that which I have not seen myself, but have been obliged to rely upon the accounts of others, I have in addition commonly used the word berattades or sages or skal, but that which I have either seen myself, or all have related with one mouth, I have said that it is so. I have studiously omitted descriptions of plants, animals, and rocks, orters, djurs, och stenarters. Most readers regard them as wearisome; besides they make the book larger and dearer; but I have always introduced where I have got to know of any, the uses of plants, animals, and minerals. The descriptions I will, please God, communicate in a Latin work at some future time. A bo, the 13th July, 1753. Kalm, who had married in America, in 1750, a lady from Sweden, died on the 16th November, 1779, without completing his account of his travels. Thus says Odhelius (A minnelse Tal, p. 25): The description of the American travels which he published by degrees during the same period, gave him additional occupation.
