

Labour and the New World (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Labour and the New World
Is the old World Order in process of dissolution? Are we witnessing in the tragic events of recent years and in the appalling economic condition of Europe the death struggles of an economic system and the painful birth-pangs of a new civilization? These are questions which thoughtful men are asking, and the answer they give to themselves will depend in the main on their knowledge of historical and economic processes. A mood of pessimism is natural after the experiences through which the world has passed since 1914. There are those who, in every movement or change, see the coming of the end of all things; and the aftermath of a great war provides abundant material for dismal forebodings and prognostications. The literature of the time of the French Revolution, and of the years following the end of the long Napoleonic Wars, is full of prophecies of the impending doom of civilization. But the world has survived many cataclysms, and upon the ruins of each has built a new and, on the whole, a better economic system and a higher civilization. About the Publisher
