

Suffering: Refining the Hidden Heart: It is the hidden heart or self, that God desires for us to willingly reveal to Him

There is within each of us a hidden heart. A place secreted away deep beneath that part of us that we do not allow others to see or to become acquainted with. Throughout our growing up years, we discover that complete and vulnerable openness, exposes a person to hurt, abuse and rejection. So little by little we learn to hide within ourselves. Hiding ourselves from others is a natural protective decision making process that we develop as a child. We learn at a very early age through negative experiences and interactions with others, that being vulnerable is not safe. In time we learn to wear a variety of masks to convey to others an aspect of ourselves that we wish another to see depending upon their threat value. We can create so many masks that in time, we discover that for the most part we have inadvertently become hidden from ourselves. In reality, to our great loss we discover later in life that we are hiding from God, because we know that there is an indivisible wall between who we are, and who God is, and between our fallen nature and His holiness. Only God can see past the masks that we have created to protect ourselves, and through suffering, He can refine the hidden heart in each of our lives.
