

Remarks Upon Recent Commercial Legislation: Suggested by the Expository Statement of the Revenue From Customs, and Other Papers Lately Submitted to Parliament (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Remarks Upon Recent Commercial Legislation: Suggested by the Expository Statement of the Revenue From Customs, and Other Papers Lately Submitted to Parliament

The Expository Statement of the Customs Revenue of the United Kingdom, which was presented to Parliament at the opening of the session by her Majesty's command, has attracted considerable notice from the public: and a desire has been expressed in the House of Commons by one of its most distinguished members for something in the nature of a commentary upon that statement, which should bring clearly and definitely into view the leading results it may be found to establish. It is, indeed, obvious that a series of tables so complex and extended afford rather the crude materials of information to the general observer, than information itself. On account of my official cognisance of those changes of the law in 1842, which led to the preparation of the document in question, I am led to make an attempt of the nature I have described. And upon the whole I have preferred making it through the medium of the press, rather than occupying so much of the time of the House of Commons, engrossed as it is by the mass of other business, as would be requisite for the purpose of an oral exposition essentially involving many figures and details.
