Excerpt: ... Virginia where continual conflicts take place between the Eastern and Western counties for political supremacy. In the West there is a large free population; the London Economist in its number for June 14 1862, assures us that free labour has caused servile labour almost entirely to disappear there. And yet this paper is in favour of seces sion. We should not forget that, according to statistics, the population of the South in 1860 was divided into 8,600,000 freemen and 3,999,000 slaves, and that the lands subjected to servile labour included only 173,000,000 acres, whilst those cultivated by free men consisted of 331,000,000 acres (1). This explains how the antagonism which exists between the North and South is manifest also, but in a lesser degree, in different Southern countries. Liberty possesses the sources of the rivers, it reigns over the mountains and elevated places; slavery on the contrary has established itself in the low lands near the mouths of the rivers, whither the heat and marshy land, which are very suitable for the culture of cotton, rice, and sugar, summon the tropical labourers. Nature has formed by the double chain of mountains which extend from Alabama to the Saint Laurence river, a refuge for liberty in the midst of these regions desolated by slavery. This is proved by referring to the map. This immense ridge which separates the Atlantic from the valley of the Mississippi constitutes a free country, where a free atmosphere reigns, above the low lands in which (1) See page 31. the black Africans wallow. The wave of liberty suspended on the heights up to the present time, unceasingly threatens to overrun the plains and submerge barbarism. The cotton kings
