

The Coming Revolution in Great Britain (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Coming Revolution in Great Britain Curses, like chickens, come home to roost, and promises, like pie-crusts, are made to be broken: these sayings which we learned in our childhood contain much more than an element of truth - they are truth. The classes in power throughout the world are in that position solely because they and their predecessors have pinned their faith to the doctrine of might is right. The whole basis of society rests on armed force, ready at all times to be used on the side of vested interests and special privilege. Now and then one class replaces another, and sometimes a tiny section is able to exercise power. In every case there is no real consent of the governed to be governed. There is, of course, a kind of tacit or implied acquiescence, which is a very different thing. People accept the ills of to-day because they are not very certain what sort of a change to-morrow might bring forth; but everywhere and at all times governments, and most peoples, do believe in the theory that those who have the power have also the right. But the modern working-class movement - or at least some sections of it - are challenging the theory that the use of violence and force is right when used by a government, but is Wrong when used by revolutionists.
